The Stabilimenta is the first illustrated account of the regulations of the Knights Hospitallers. It was written by Guillaume Caoursin (pictured here), who worked for the order for forty years of his life.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
Caoursin wrote many books for the Order, most of them about the island of Rhodes, which was the seat of the Hospitallers between 1310 and 1522, and where Guillaume passed away in 1501. The Stabilimenta was published alongside several of his works in Ulm, in 1496.
Throughout the years, Caoursin worked under three different Grand Masters of the Order, the last of these being Pierre d’Aubusson – who wrote the introduction to the Stabilimenta, and is likely pictured here.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
The Knights Hospitallers can be recognised in these illustrations thanks to the Maltese Cross present on their clothing. Here, you can see a knight standing inside the city walls.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
Beyond their military aspect, the Knights Hospitallers were also diplomats. The Latin caption of this illustration (cropped) indicates that this may have represented a meeting with officials from Alexandria, in Egypt.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org

Here, a knight is meeting with a notable Ottoman – maybe Cem Sultan or his older brother Bayezid II, 8th Padishah (Sultan of the Ottoman Empire). Bayezid II was the grandfather of the famous Suleiman the Magnificent, who would eventually conquer Rhodes.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
It seems that taking your hat off when greeting someone is a long-standing tradition! A delegation of Knights greets some fellow travellers.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org

In this detail above the two groups meeting, we can see a ship leaving the city.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
While never very large, the Hospitallers' navy grew after their arrival on Rhodes, allowing them to better defend the island from pirates and other potential attackers. They also used it to support other military Orders around the Mediterranean Sea.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org
Plate from Eigentlicher und gründlicher Bericht..., A3.5. Christian von Osterhausen, plate by W. Kilian, 1650.

This very complete history of the Knights Hospitallers – now Knights of Malta – is illustrated by several beautiful plates. This one might represent the famous Santa Anna, the first carrack of the Knights.

For more coloring pages, visit ColorOurCollections.org