

#ColorOurCollections

This object is from the collection of

Two-piece Dress, Nellie Dennis, 1880s
Nashville dressmaker Nellie Dennis made this elegant bustle-style dress.

Show us your coloring page on social media!

www.tnmuseum.org

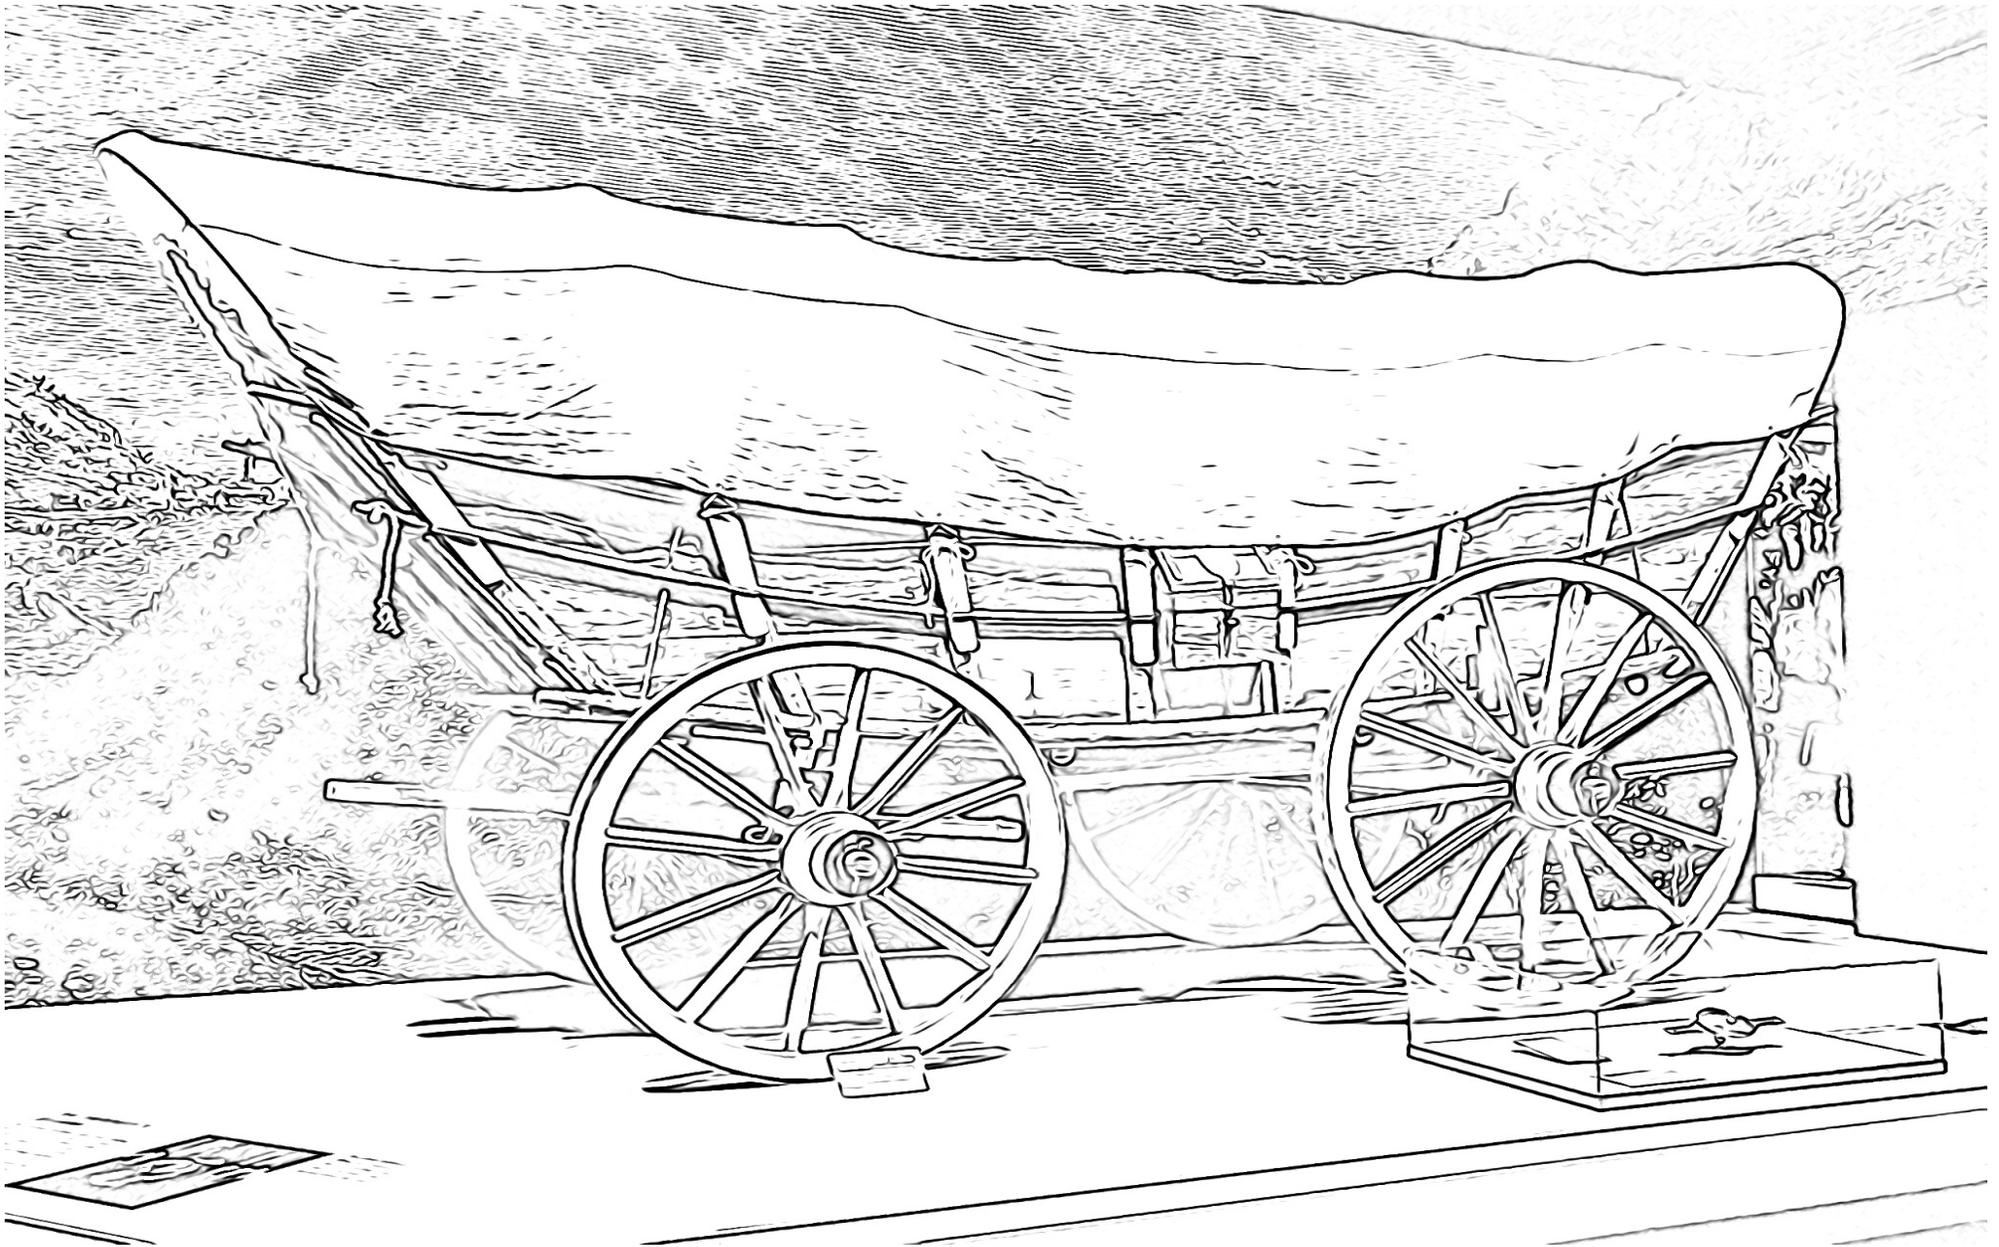

Quaker Oats Crystal Radio Set, 1921-1923

This working radio could be purchased as a promotional item by a consumer for $1.00 and two Quaker Oats labels.

Show us your coloring page on social media!

Conestoga Wagons like this one were common in the Tennessee country from the late 1700s until about 1860, carrying freight and settlers as soon as roadways were cleared.

Show us your coloring page on social media!

Pictoglyph, 1000-1450

This pictoglyph was found in 1874 in Sumner County, Tennessee. It depicts clearly the clothing, ornaments, and implements used by the Mississippian people of this region.

Show us your coloring page on social media!

#ColorOurCollections

This object is from the collection of

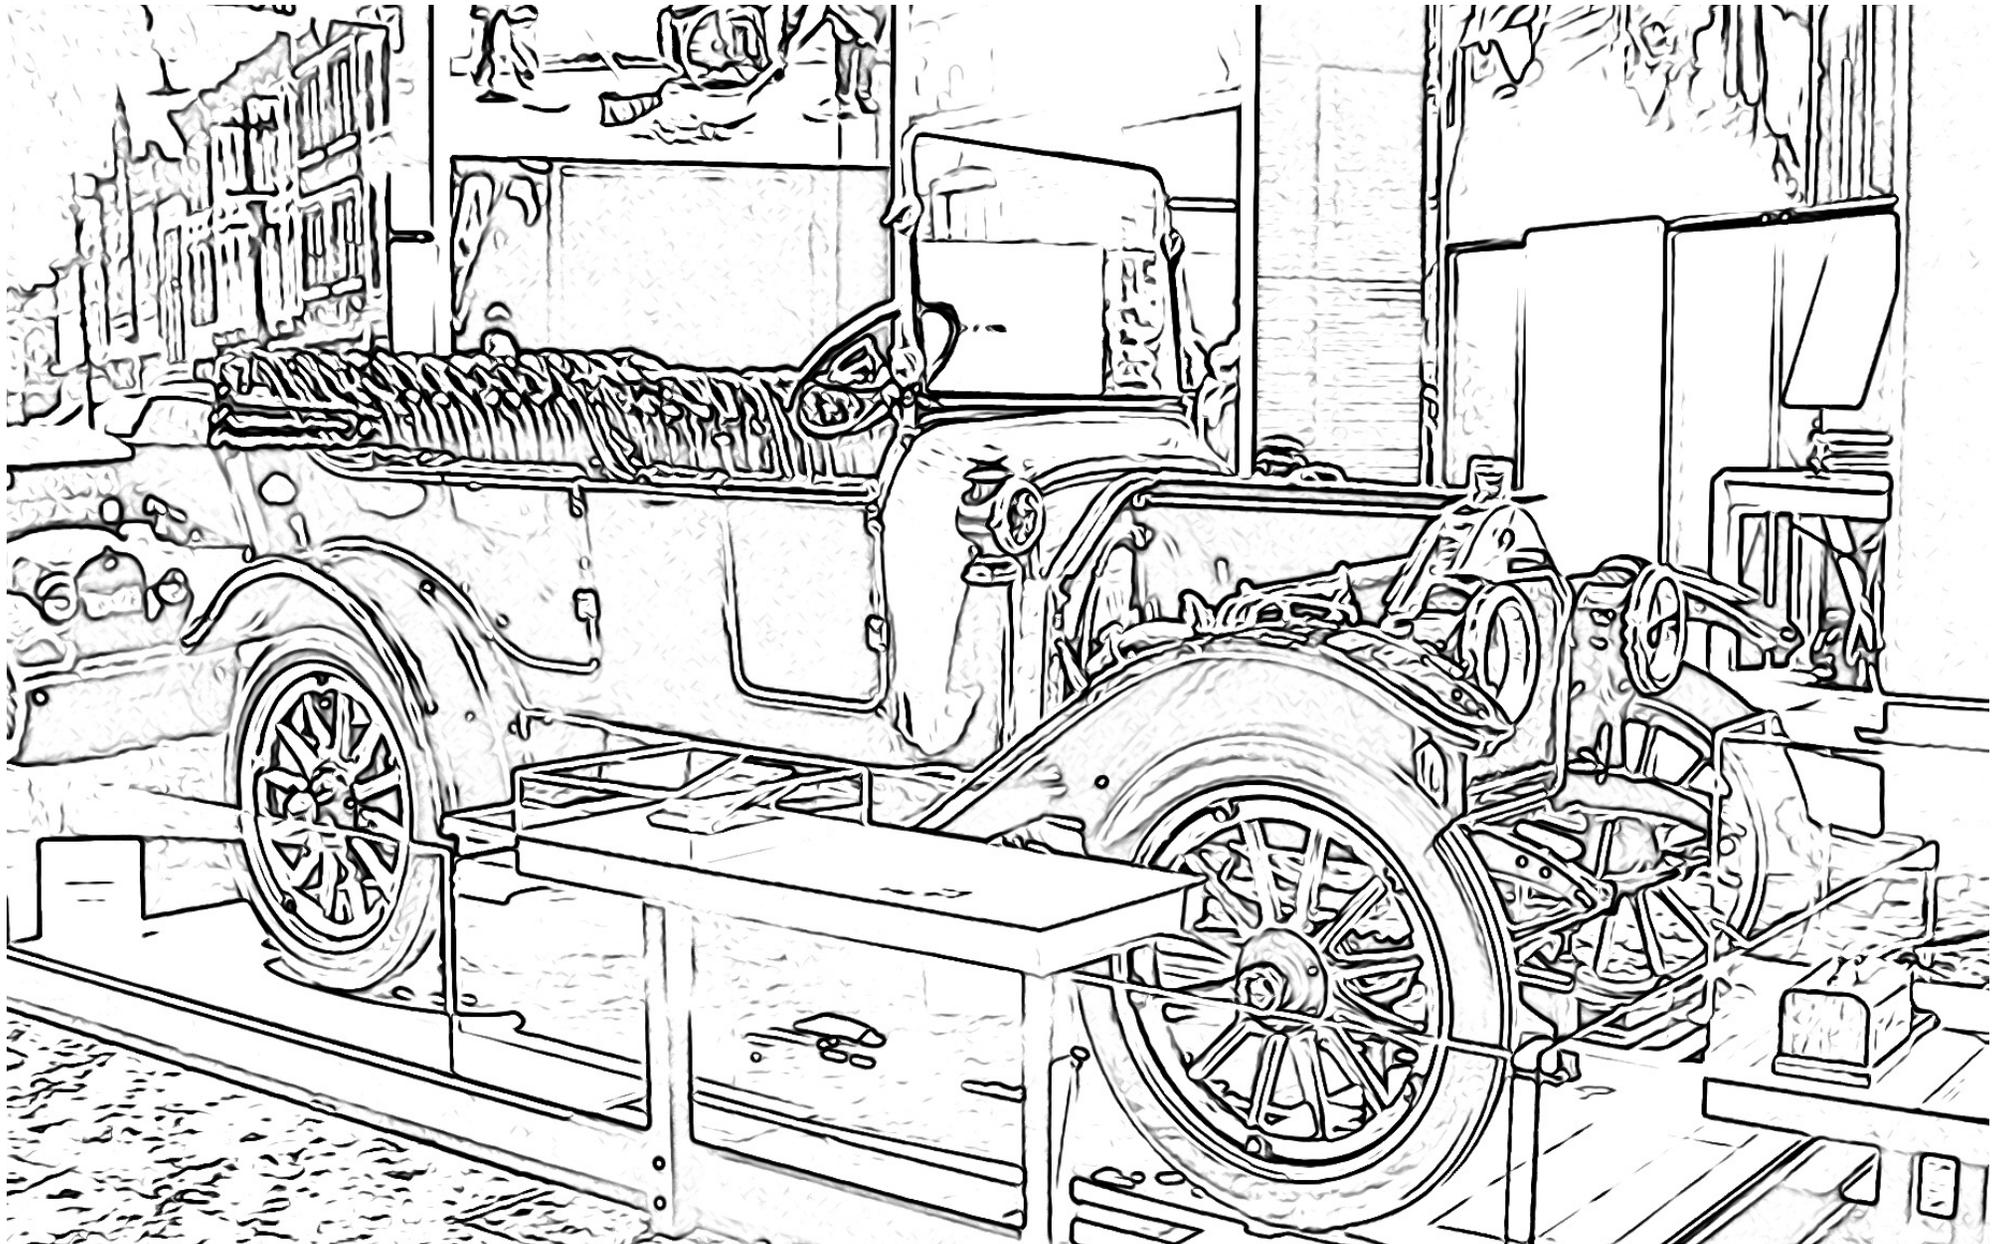

Martha Swanson Sundquist Doll, 1995
This doll is wearing a replica of the dress worn by Martha Sundquist to the 1995 Inaugural ball.

Show us your coloring
page on social media!

www.tnmuseum.org

Marathon Automobile, Made in Tennessee, 1914
Automobiles changed how Tennesseans lived and worked.
On loan from Barry Walker, Marathon Motor Works, Nashville

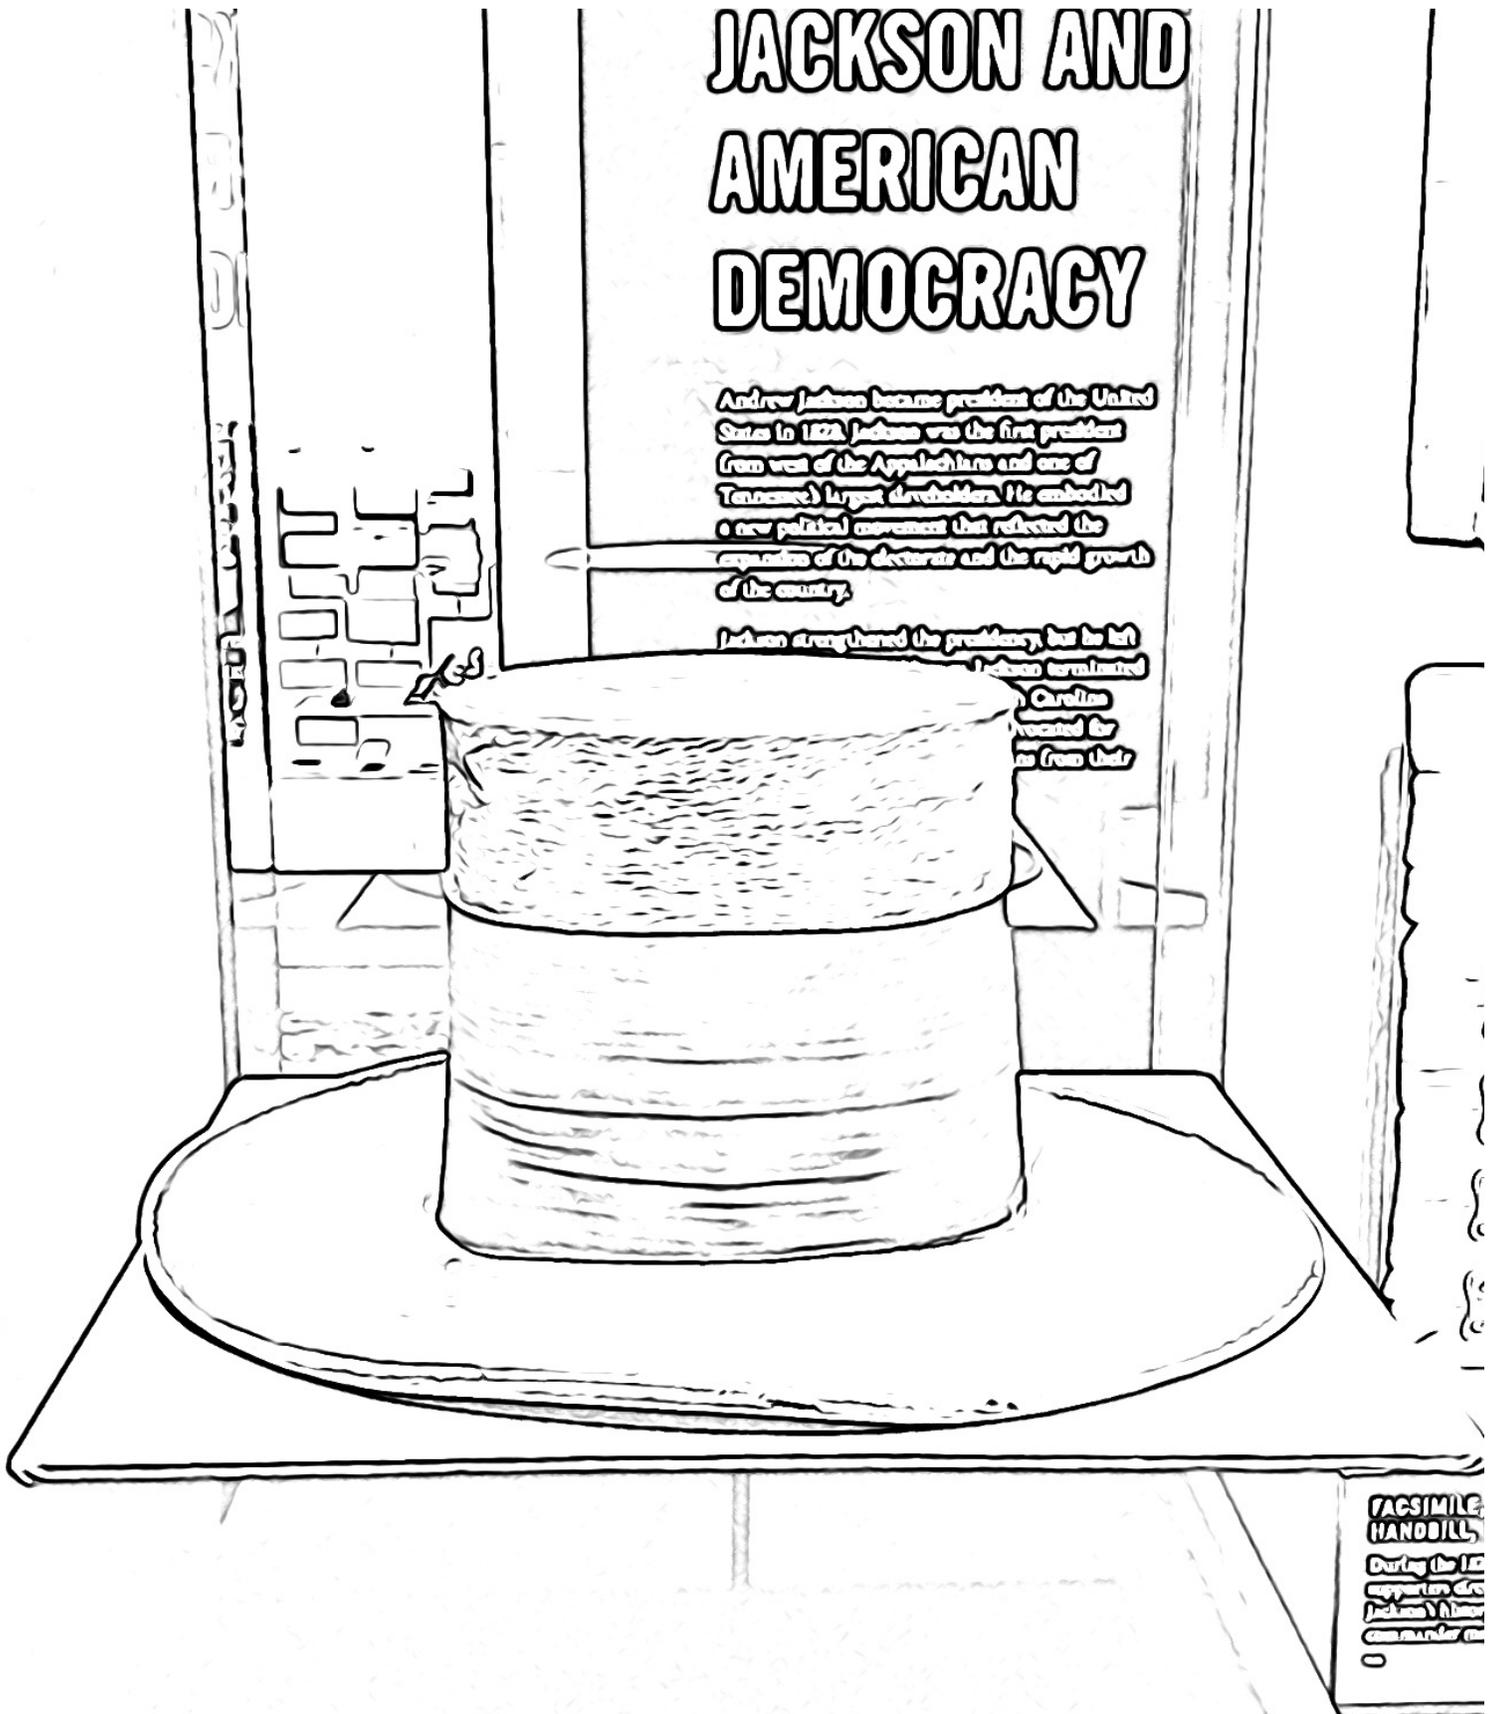

Show us your coloring page on social media!

JACKSON AND AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

Andrew Jackson became president of the United States in 1829. Jackson was the first president from west of the Appalachians and one of Tennessee's largest slaveholders. He embodied a new political movement that reflected the expansion of the electorate and the rapid growth of the country.

Jackson strengthened the presidency, but he left a legacy of controversy. Jackson terminated the rights of Native Americans. His wife, Rachel, was accused of poisoning her husband. Jackson's daughter, Rachel, was accused of poisoning her husband. Jackson's daughter, Rachel, was accused of poisoning her husband.

FACSIMILE
HANDBILL
During the 1820s supporters of Jackson's commander of

Andrew Jackson's beaver hat, ca. 1829
Hat worn by Andrew Jackson at his inauguration as president of the United States. It was made by Orlando Fish of New York.

Show us your coloring page on social media!