

This WWII poster created by John Philip Falter shows Admiral Chester W. Nimitz pointing to Japan on a map and saying, "That's the spot to hit!". Official Navy poster, Industrial Incentive Division, 9-90M ; "U.S. Government Printing Office: 1944

This WWI poster created by Georges Schreiber depicts a soldier as he parachutes from a plane in a night sky. Published in Washington, D.C. by the U.S. Treasury Department; "U.S. Government Printing Office: 1943"

PAINTING BY SGT. TOM LOVELL

ENLIST NOW
U.S. MARINE CORPS

This WWII created by Tom Lovell is U.S. Marines recruiting poster from 1945 that depicts a group of American soldiers raising the American flag on the island of Iwo Jima. American military achievement was essential to the recruitment of U.S. forces in the Pacific and Europe.

This WWII poster created by Georges Schreiber depicts a pilot strapping himself into a cockpit, with six Rising Sun flags painted on the side of the plane, indicating the future destruction of Imperial Japan. Produced in Washington, D.C.; "U.S. Government Printing Office: 1943"

PRITZKER MILITARY

MUSEUM & LIBRARY

This WWII poster created by Adolph Treidler is a depiction of a Woman Ordnance Worker and a large shell, with hats of six women's branches of military service along the right edge. Produced in Washington D.C.; "U.S. Government Printing Office: 1942"