

Color Our Collections

~ 1925 ~

“During the past ten years I have spent from three to four months each season in the Canadian Rockies...covering in all more than five thousand miles on the mountain trails. This afforded me a wonderful opportunity for intimate study of the flora, my aim being to collect and paint the finest specimens obtainable, and to depict the natural grace and beauty of the plant without conventional design. ...[To many] the living flowers are inaccessible, and their real beauty is unknown.”

– Mary Vaux Walcott, foreword, North American Wild Flowers

On Jan 1, 2021, works from 1925 entered the public domain in the United States. Works in the public domain can be freely copied, distributed, sold, remixed, and reused. This coloring book was created to highlight one of the works from our Rare Book Room that is now in the public domain.

#ColorOurCollections is a
annual social media campaign where libraries, archives, and museums turn works from their collections into coloring pages.

This year's book features illustrations from the 1925
book North American Wild Flowers by Mary Vaux
Walcott, which recently entered the public domain.
